Beyond Behaviour: Understanding self and others in groups

25-26 April 2026 | Delhi | In-person

We often assume people think, decide, and respond the way we do. In reality, they don't, and that gap shows up as miscommunication, slow decisions, unresolved and repeated friction in teams.

Drawing on Jung's construct of psychological types and its application through frameworks such as the MBTI, this 18-hour workshop offers a lens to explore individual and group behaviour. Join us to experience real conversations in addition to concepts, reflect on our own patterns, acknowledge and appreciate individual differences and their source while developing a deeper understanding of group dynamics in action.

For Whom: Anyone working closely with people*

Facilitator: Ramesh Galohda

Ramesh Galohda is a senior practitioner in human relations with over 50 years of experience across leadership and consulting. A long-standing member of ISABS, he has led and shaped key developmental programs in the field. His work integrates deep psychological insight, including Jungian thought, with real-world practice. He has consulted with leading institutions such as BHEL, NTPC, IOCL, L&T, and dozens of global organisations. His facilitation is reflective, experiential, and designed to enable lasting shifts in how people understand themselves and others in groups.
